Attributed to Benvenuto Tisi, called Il Garofalo)

Although the graphic style of Garofalo is still quite obscure and his drawings are very rare, Philip Pouncey did shed some light on the subject in an article, 'Drawings by Garofalo' in The Burlington Magazine (vol. XCVII, 1955, pp. 196ff).

Ballarin associated this large compositional study with biblical-pastoral works by Bassano, datable to the years 1563-68, and pointed out the similarities in style with paintings such as Jacob and Rachel at the Well of about 1565 (private collection, Turin). Roger Rearick, however, suggested a later dating of circa 1578, based on stylistic comparison with two other drawings of that date, the Flight into Egypt (on the verso of a study of St. Jerome in the Accademia Carrara, Bergamo, inv. no. 294) and the Presentation of the Virgin (Muzeum Narodowe W. Warszawie, Warsaw, inv. no. rys ob.d iii). Although the present drawing cannot be related to a known work, Rearick noted that there was a painting of this subject listed as no. 69 in the inventory of Bassano's workshop made at his death. Vittoria Romani, in the Fort Worth exhibition catalogue, pointed out similarities with a drawing in the Uffizi, The Mystic Marriage of St. Catherine, which is dated 1567.

CAMILLO PROCACCINI

Study for a fresco: St. Carlo Borromeo in procession, flanked by statues of Sts. Nazarus & Celus in niches
Red chalk with cut out pentimenti
288 by 504 mm

$50,000

This is a preparatory study for Procaccini's fresco, now destroyed, on the right wall of the presbytery of S. Nazzaro Maggiore, Milan. It formed part of a cycle of frescoes of scenes of the lives of Sts. Nazarus and Celus, completed by Camillo shortly before 1619. The commission is described by Malvasia in Felsina Pittrice, 1678, vol. I, p. 282. This composition records the transfer in 1579 of the relics of Sts. Nazarus and Celsus to the new altar of the basilica which had been radically restructured in 1578 on the instructions of St. Carlo Borromeo.
Two related composition studies are known: one by Camillo now in Berlin-Dahlem (kdg. 16307), the other, now in the Louvre (inv. no. 6738), a copy after a lost original by Camillo (see N. W. Neilson, Camillo Procaccini, New York 1979, pp. 78-79, figs. 264, 265). The highly finished quality of the present drawing suggests that it was a final study for the fresco.

This drawing shows Scipio, Hannibal and Alexander disputing in Hades before Minos, judge of the underworld (represented here with Pluto's fork and snakes) about which of them had been the greatest. The subject comes from Lucian's dialogue Minos (Dialogue of the Dead, ix), which ends with Scipio arguing that he should be placed after Alexander but before Hannibal, whom in real life he had defeated, and with Minos thereupon pronouncing Alexander the winner.

GIOVANNI LANFRANCO

Recto: Studies of three male heads Verso: A half length figure looking up and a study of a face
Black chalk and charcoal heightened with white, on blue paper (recto and verso)
417 by 282 mm

$40,000

PROVENANCE

Sale, New York, Sotheby's, 28 January 2016, lot 113

This broadly and vigorously executed, double-sided sheet is highly characteristic of Lanfranco's individual graphic style, with its bold, strong strokes of black chalk, heightened with white chalk, and typical use of blue paper. The mise-en-page, combining various studies, is also comparable with many other sheets by the artist. On the recto, the study of the face of a young man looking down, surely drawn from life, can be closely compared to a very similar head, most likely that of the same model, but shown looking upwards, in a drawing now in the Museo di Capodimonte, Naples.¹ The sheet in Capodimonte was associated by Raffaello Causa to The Martyrdom of St. John, part of Lanfranco's fresco decoration for the church of the SS. Apostoli, Naples (1638-1646).² The studies on the present sheet do not, however, seem to be related to this same scene.

There are also certain stylistic similarities with two other sheets at Capodimonte,³ both preparatory for the figure of St. Sebastian in the earlier painting by Lanfranco of St. Sebastian in Glory, in the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston (fig. 1).⁴ The head in the present sheet is quite similar to that of St. Sebastian in the Houston painting, which is dated by Schleier to around 1634, just before Lanfranco's departure for Naples, to start work on the fresco decorations in the Gesù Nuovo (1634-5). The painting appears in the 1644 inventory of the Cardinal Antonio Baberini, but it is not certain if it was he who commissioned it.

CAMILLO BOCCACCINO
The Raising of Lazarus

Point of the brush and brown wash, heightened with white on brown prepared paper

$90,000

The present drawing is a preparatory study for Boccaccino's fresco of The Raising of Lazarus, in the presbytery of the Church of San Sigismondo, Cremona.

Boccaccino executed a second fresco, as part of the same commission, depicting Christ and the adulterous woman, which, like The Raising of Lazarus, can be dated to circa 1540.

Further studies for The Raising of Lazarus survive, including an impressive compositional study in the Ambrosiana, Milan, and two studies for individual figures found in the foreground of the painted composition, both of which are preserved in the collection of the Uffizi, Florence.

FEDERICO ZUCCARO

A portrait of the architect, Jacopo Vignola
Black and red chalk 248 by 190 mm

$10,000

PROVENANCE

Sale, New York, Bonhams, 8 May 2013, lot 3

The present drawing is an excellent example of Federico's portraiture of friends and associates, made in all likelihood around the time he took over the commission to complete the interior decoration of the cupola of Santa Maria dei Fiore in Florence, left unfinished by Giorgio Vasari upon his death in 1574. It compares well with similar drawings in Brussels and the Louvre, both in red and black chalks.

Looking at the roughly sketched details of costume, it appears that the sitter is a gentleman. He wears a cape, a ring or rings on the small finger of his left hand and holds what appears to be a glove. A more intriguing detail is the pair of dividers resting on the table, often an attribute of an architect. Certainly Federico knew a few architects and even portrayed one in a portrait drawing that was later turned into a fresco.

There is a presumed portrait of Giacomo Vignola, the architect of the Farnese villa at Caprarola, for which Federico and Taddeo Zuccaro created the interior decorations, now at the Ashmolean Museum in Oxford, which bears a resemblance to the present sitter, but clearly his beard and hair are better kempt in the Ashmolean sheet. We are also treated to views of different sides of his face, seen from the right at Oxford. Thus, while the evidence is not conclusive, it can be suggested that he is an architect and possibly Vignola.

James Mundy confirmed the attribution to Federico Zuccaro on the basis of photographs at the time of the Bonhams sale in 2013.

This is a study for the figure of St. William and an acolyte in Guercino's famous altarpiece, painted in 1620 for San Gregorio, Bologna, and now in the Pinoteca Nazionale. Many drawings related to this commission have survived and provide a fascinating view of the evolution of the composition (D. Mahon, Il Guercino, Catalogo Critico dei Disegni, Bologna 1969, pp. 75-86). The present study is very close to one at Windsor (Mahon, op.cit., no. 76) which Sir Denis suggests was made to finalise changes made directly onto the canvas, possibly to satisfy a request from the patron to show William at the very moment of assuming his monastic habit (see D. Mahon, op.cit., Bologna 1969, no. 76).

sale, New York, Sotheby's, 21 January 2003, lot 51

Nicholas Turner suggested that the study could relate to the picture by Guercino of the same subject in the Galleria Estense in Modena (see L. Salerno, I Dipinti del Guercino, Rome 1988, cat. no. 151). The present study does however differ substantially from the final painting as well as from the other known drawings related to the same composition, which include four further composition studies. Two of those are autograph works by Guercino: one is in the BM (Inv. no. 1910-2-12-4) and the other, formerly in the Chute collection, is now in the Ratjen Foundation in Vaduz (see N. Turner and C. Plazzotta, Drawings by Guercino in British Collections, London 1991, p. 247-8, under cat. no. 21, and E. Schaar, ed., Stiftung Ratjen: Italienische Zeichnungen..., exhib. cat., Munich 1977, cat. no. 71). Of the two remaining sheets, one, closest to the final composition, is a red chalk studio copy after a lost original (sold, London, Christie's, 30 March 1971, lot 133), while the other, formerly in the collection of Thomas Jenkins, is known only from an etching by Giovanni Ottaviani (see Turner and Plazzotta, loc. cit.).

in London (see Provenance) as Italian School, 17th century, but with a catalogue note saying that the style of the drawings was close to that of Agostino Tassi. The previous lot in the same sale was another album with the same provenance, but containing drawings by a different hand. In her recent article, Patrizia Cavazzini gives a detailed account (op.cit., pp. 3-31) of the fascinating history of these two albums, which she calls the

This beautiful and intense portrait is very close in style to the two red chalk portraits by Maratti of the sculptor Domenico Guidi, one drawing full face and the second in profile, both now in the BM (see N. Turner, Roman Baroque Drawings, c.1620-c.1700, London 1999, vol. I pp. 177-178, reproduced vol. II. pls. 177-178). Both drawings bear a seventeenth century attribution to Carlo Maratti. In the context of the traditional identification of the sitter in the present work, it is interesting to note the Domenico Guidi worked in Algardi's studio from 1649 to 1654. Although the accuracy of the old pen and ink inscription at the bottom of the sheet, comparison with known likenesses suggest that it should not necessarily be dismissed: in particular, there are clear similarities with the painted portrait of the artist in the Accademia di San Luca, Rome, and with the profile engraving included in Bellori's Vite.

Malvasia, in his biography of Faccini, records the popularity of these male nude studies with notable collectors of the time such as Cardinal Leopoldo de' Medici (see C.G.
